Inspiring Book Hits The Market

We have always thought "our brain shapes us." A new book, The Woman Who Changed Her Brain by Barbara Arrowsmith-Young, argues that the re-verse is equally true. We can "shape our brains." The book features stories of young boys and girls in yeshivas who changed their brains and, as a result, no longer struggle with learning disabilities.

Imagine having a brain that is capable and incapable at the same time. Growing up, Arrowsmith-Young had severe learning disabilities. She lived in a world that was confusing and incomprehensible. She could not understand cause and effect, and so felt buffeted by random events, not being able to see the "why" of things. She walked around in a fog, relying on her excellent memory and her drive and determination to find an answer to what plagued her. As a young psychology grad student, frustrated with the enormous expenditure of energy required to work around her problems, she came across the research of Russian neuropsychologist Alexander Luria. Dr. Luria had studied soldiers who had suffered head wounds. Using Luria's detailed descriptions of the functions of various brain regions, she identified 19 unique learning dysfunctions. And after reading the research of Mark Rosenzweig who demonstrated that stimulation could improve the brains of rats, she theorized that a person could transform weak areas of the brain through repetitive and targeted cognitive exercises. With much reading and an intuitive understanding of the brain's functioning, she invented a series of cognitive exercises to "fix"

JDA (Jewish Diabetes Association) will hold a JDA Run for Diabetes 5K/10K for Women on August 5 in Rockland Lake State Park to help spread awareness and raise much-needed funds for the organization.

Group Commemorates Holocaust In Bardejov, Slovakia

An international group of 130 travelers, including Holocaust survivors and their families, came together in Bardejov, Slovakia on May 14-17 for an historic gathering commemorating the  $70^{\rm th}$  anniversary of the deportation of the town's Jewish population in 1942.

Visitors, ranging in age from 2 to 87, traveled from six countries - Australia, Canada, England, Israel, Mexico and the USA. For some it was a homecoming, for others a chance to meet relatives for the first time or to see a place they had only heard of in family reminiscences. Local government officials, clergy, townspeople and student groups welcomed the guests and joined them in a number of the public activities.

Highlighting the commemoration was a Solidarity March on Tuesday, May 15, that began at the Train Station – the Jews' final departure place from Bardejov – and ended in the historical heart of this town, which had been a thriving Jewish community of over 3,000 prior to World War II. Roughly 500 people participated in the walk, which closed down Bardejov's main street for the first time in the city's history, according to local police records.

In addition, an overflow crowd attended a ceremony in the Old Synagogue, and 140 people crowded into the Town Hall's Government Chamber for a special reception with the mayor, who welcomed visitors back to Bardejov and gave each a certificate of participation and a flower, and had them sign the city log book. On the historic Town Square, 400 people crowded in to hear speeches from a representative from President Ivan Gasparic and Mayor Boris Hanuscak, as well as Bardejov Holocaust survivor Emil Fish, now a resident of Los Angeles, California.

The "7 Righteous of Bardejov" were honored, and students solemnly read the names and number of family members of each family that had lived in Bardejov prior to the 1942 deportations. (The 437 family names represented one third of the town's population at that time; Bardejov today is "a town without Jews.") Seminars, local tours, and presentations on genealogy and family history were also part of the multifaceted activities.

Intergenerational Shabbaton

Seven local high school students from Kew Gardens Hills and Hillcrest took part in a unique Shabbaton experience under the auspices of NCSY. The group of teens, accompanied by a handful of NCSY staff members , joined the Shabbos morning minyan at Margaret Tietz Nursing & Rehabilitation Center and stayed for the communal Shabbos lunch. During the break between davening and the meal, the students spent quality time interacting with the residents. With the lovely weather beckoning, many took advantage of the outdoors to sit with residents in the gardens and get to know them on an individual basis. The seudah that followed was replete with spirited singing, divrei Torah, and trademark Shabbos food by Chef Yossi and Eli.

Today, her program – ad-dressing learning problems such as dyslexia, auditory processing, attention, non-verbal learning, executive functioning, and auditory and visual memory – is being widely used in pub-lic and private schools in Canada and the U.S.

The Arrowsmith Program is currently being offered at the following yeshivas: Bais Yaakov of Boro Park, Beis Chaya Mushka in Crown Heights, Eitz Chaim Schools in Toronto, Jewish Educational Center (JEC) in Elizabeth, NJ, Yeshiva Degel Hatorah in Monsey, and Yeshiva Tiferes Torah in Lakewood.
